I currently report on climate issues, business and finance and more as a freelance journalist. I'm also finishing my first book.

POLITICO

Sustainability Reporter

I covered sustainability issues as they relate to politics and policies at the federal and state levels. I wrote a morning newsletter for subscribers that went out three times a week and contributed to our larger, consumer-facing weekly newsletter, while also writing feature stories, news briefs and other content. My coverage focused on carbon management, the voluntary carbon market and carbon offsets, the anti-ESG movement and more.

The Wall Street Journal

New York, N.Y.

Breaking News Reporter

I spent four years on the financial breaking news desk where I produced quick-turn stories on a variety of breaking business news, from companies' earnings, mergers and acquisitions and other corporate announcements. I also covered financial markets, labor unions and regional banks. I also helped launch the Journal's speed and trending desk, a broader breaking news desk that covered a more expansive range of daily news, while I continued to produce feature stories on the side.

American Banker

Community Banking Reporter

I covered community banks and wrote features on trends going on in the industry and reported on their quarterly financials. My stories touched on policy, weather impacts, executive moves and the like.

The Post and Courier

2015 - 2016

Business Reporter

I covered the tech and tourism industries and wrote about trends and issues facing the city's burgeoning tech sector, which included a number of startups, and its bustling hospitality space. Some examples of my coverage included the state's attempts to regulate Uber and a profile of the creator of the sports bra, among a number of other topics.

I interned during college at the following news outlets: the St. Louis Beacon, the Kansas City Star, Bloomberg News, the Wall Street Journal and the Indianapolis Star.
